KELLOGG INSTITUTE FOR INTERNATIONAL STUDIES FELLOWSHIPS

The Helen Kellogg Institute for International Studies brings the best of interdisciplinary inquiry to bear on research themes relevant to contemporary societies around the world, especially democracy and human development. Drawing faculty fellows from across the University, students, and visiting scholars, the Institute promotes research, provides exceptional educational opportunities for students, and builds linkages to support the University's strategic goals on internationalization. The Kellogg Institute creates a space where those interested in international affairs can engage—with one another and with issues crucial to human society. Known for its regional focus on Latin America, the Institute has in recent years widened its scope to include Africa, Asia, and beyond.

The Kellogg institute is offering fellowships to scholars and practitioners who conduct international research on themes of democracy and/or human development. Applicants may come from any country and typically fall into three groups: promising junior and midcareer scholars (typically postdocs and assistant or associate professors), distinguished senior scholars with an established record of scholarly excellence, accomplished policy makers, journalists, and other practitioners whose knowledge and experience can link policy and scholarship. Fellowship includes a stipend, travel expenses, medical insurance benefits, partial housing subsidy and up to $1,500 of conference travel support for recipients of one and two-year fellowships.

NORTHWESTERN MICHIGAN COLLEGE GOES GLOBAL

www.nmc.edu

NMC | Find it here.

Northwestern Michigan College President, Timothy J. Nelson, has announced an on-going fundraiser called the Global Opportunities Fund to ensure their students are prepared for success in a global economy and society. Over the next two years the fund will assist NMC in student scholarships, establishing a residency program to host global experts, financing faculty trips abroad to develop partnerships with international institutions, and funding internships for international students jointly with businesses in the Grand Traverse region.

"The growth and change that takes place in developing countries will have a profound effect on the lives of students' in the future," remarked NMC's Dennis Museum Director, Eugene Jenneman.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS PARTICIPATE IN STAGECRAFT INSTITUTE PROGRAM

LAS VEGAS
REVIEW-JOURNAL

Agnes Nakakawa, a 32-year-old mother and sound designer from Uganda, believes there is a way, through theater, to help her people. In June, she came to Stagecraft Institute in Las Vegas, a nonprofit, hoping to gain inspiration and information, two things she can immediately share with her people. Nakakawa was one of 25 students from around the world enrolled in an intensive eight-week local theater program that teaches every aspect of backstage theater.

REGIS COLLEGE STUDENTS RECEIVE IPADS

All students and faculty at Regis College in Weston, Mass., will get iPads when the fall semester begins, the latest in a growing number of educational institutions to take the digital leap to tablets. "It's very engaging to have multimedia capabilities in the classroom," said Marla Botelho, chief information officer at Regis. "People learn in different ways." Though the iPad will not entirely replace textbooks, that's the direction the college plans to go in, Botelho said. Andrea Humphry, a professor of English at Regis, plans to use the iPads to conduct instant surveys of her class with a group polling app called eClicker. "It's a way of employing more of their senses at once," she said.

GETTING INTO MEDICAL SCHOOL AS AN INTERNATIONAL STUDENT

Promise, a Nigerian freshman biology major studying at Augsburg College in Minneapolis, blogs about the hurdles awaiting him when the time comes to apply to medical school in the United States. From the right test scores and grades to beyond grades, he writes about his medical school application concerns.

"In all my meetings with these people, there has been one thing each of them emphasized: hard work. They said I will have to work twice as hard as an American applicant to get into medical school. I don't doubt that. Already it has been predictably rough to follow this dream."
