EXPERTS SUGGEST WAYS TO HELP INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS MAKE FRIENDS

Some international students have few friends in their host country when they study overseas. One study in the United States found that thirty-eight percent of foreign students said they had no close American friends. Communications specialist Elisabeth Gareis studied more than four hundred fifty foreign students.

Elisabeth says that efforts on how to improve relationships between the two groups of students have yet to be studied in detail. However, she also says that these efforts should begin with the college or university, and that these institutions have been working harder.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY NON-PROFIT AIDS INTERNATIONAL STUDENTS

Claire Malsch didn't have a pillow, a lamp or a drying rack for her dishes when she moved to Baton Rouge. While a trip home or a visit to a local department store might be easy for some students, Malsch can't go home to get the essentials — she's spending a year away from her home in France to study business at the University.

For students like Malsch, the International Student Loan Closet uses donations to provide an inexpensive, convenient option for international students in need of household items. The Loan Closet, a service provided by the International Hospitality Foundation, is a nonprofit organization on campus, and all workers are volunteers. Any revenue is recycled back into the program to purchase new items.
